No-go at Terengganu waterfall as tiger prowls

THE Air Menderu recreational forest in Terengganu was closed off to visitors after a tiger was spotted in the area recently, reported China Press.

According to a post on the Kampung Chabang Kerteh crime prevention and community safety department's Facebook group, the large predatory feline had appeared near the village waterfall, which was an area frequented by campers and tourists.

Photos uploaded by the Facebook group also showed tiger paw prints larger than an adult male's on the ground.

Signs have been placed near the waterfall to warn visitors to stay away for the time being.

It was earlier reported that several cattle in the village were found dead, with local farmers speculating that they had been killed by a tiger.

Terengganu Wildlife and National Parks Department director Loo Kean Seong reportedly said that it has received reports on the matter and has sent officers to monitor the area.

> A grandfather in China had the Internet laughing after he was filmed shaking his head in exasperation when his grandkids queued up to receive their ang pow, the daily also reported.

Local press reported that the man's three daughters brought all their kids to visit their grandparents for Chinese New Year.

After finishing dinner, the children formed a queue to receive their ang pow. The old man was seen sitting on a stool and grimacing as he handed out red packets to the kids.

When it was time for his last grandchild to receive an ang pow, the man was seen shaking his head and giving a visible sigh, which sent many on the Internet into guffaws.

His video quickly became viral on Chinese social media.

"Grandpa's expression while shaking his head is so funny!" an Internet user said.

When interviewed, one of the man's daughters claimed that her father had been against them marrying and moving too far from home, thus not being able to visit often.

However, the old man is now regretting his decision to have them back for a visit, she said.

"Father has informed us not to visit the next holiday. He says he cannot afford to feed us!" she quipped.

> A septuagenarian in China's Anhui province fell so in love with a live-streamer that he has disowned his family in a bid to marry the woman, reported China Press.

It was reported that retiree Lin Weimin, 70, started following female live-streamers last December and would often send them rewards costing between 200 yuan and 300 yuan (RM131 and RM197).

His son Lin Hang became aware of his father's spending after the bank contacted him regarding the transactions.

According to Lin Hang, his father follows female live-streamers who sing and dance online for rewards and the old man would spend more than 10 hours a day watching these live-streamers perform.

He was so obsessed with one of the live-streamers that he claimed that he had fallen in love with her and would like to marry the woman.

Despite family members having made complaints to the live-streaming platform and even bringing the old man to a police station, he was adamant that he wanted to spend the rest of his life with the live-streamer.

He repeatedly tried to run away from home but was stopped by family members, which led him to disown his wife and his son.
